Policy on Preservation of Local History and Culture

Created January 2017 by Rachel Martens

The Hortonville Public Library recognizes the history, culture, and literature of Hortonville, the Fox Valley, and Northeast Wisconsin to be of intrinsic value to the community it serves. Hortonville is set apart from other communities in the area by the level of significance its residents place on the area's history and local color. It only makes sense that the library, a center of culture and information, take an active role in fostering and preserving this history and culture. The library therefore prides itself on maintaining a large and unique local collection, adding publications by local authors and other items of local interest to this collection, and by hosting programs which grant community members the opportunity to learn more about local history and literature.
